

How 'ownership' is used to deceive you

If you think about your life for a little and observe the things you do and interact with, there is a fairly big chance that there are many things that you consider to be yours. You can think of a house, a car, electronic equipment, money in the bank, food, clothes and so on.

If we take the house as example, most people would consider it theirs, based on the fact that they have paid off all mortgage payments after thirty hard-working years. Or they just paid it in one go if they were lucky to have the money. Finally it is theirs.

If the house is their property, why do they keep paying property tax? Why do people in some areas of the world need to ask permission in the form of a license to change something on their house? Why if somebody refuses to pay property taxes on their paid-off house, is it taken away from them and they are left homeless? Wasn't it theirs already? If it was theirs, why did someone else have a say in their house? Why would they need to pay anyone, anything involving that house, involving their own property?

Just take a moment to reflect on this fact.

If you own something, how come somebody else still has a say in it?

Let's take money in the bank as another example. Most people work for their living and after one month they receive a compensation for their work. Very often, money is deposited in their bank account and most people would consider that their money. They worked hard for it, they have bills to pay, they have fun things to do, it is their money. They worked for it and nobody else.

But if that money is theirs, why would people, in most countries, pay a tax on the amount of money they have or on the money they just have earned? Above a certain low range, people need to give a cut away from their work and savings, even if it is not that much. Didn't they just know they worked hard for it? It was theirs right? If it is theirs, how is it possible somebody else has a say about their money?

And what about some instances in a few countries in which their money was actually confiscated, 'bailed-in' or 'hair-cutted' due to some external influences like an 'economic crisis' which they had no control over?

What about the times when they were refused to withdraw money from the bank due to 'economical situations', 'the greater good' or simply because there was an issue with their paperwork?

Why would anyone have control over their money in any situation? There are so many other examples to be thought of. Just think about the above examples for a moment.

How can you own something and still have a burden of payment on that something to somebody else? Why do you need to ask permission to anyone to change something on something you own? Why?

Because you don't own it. That's why.

It is in your custody and care, but you are not the owner of it. You do not get to decide about it. And because you do not own it, it follows that somebody else owns it. There is only one owner in any system of law, but it is obvious that you are not that owner.

You don't own the house you live in, the car you drive, the clothes you wear, the money you spend, the electronic equipment you use, the food you eat etc. You own nothing. Just let that sink in.

And you do not even own your name. You think you can just go about and change your name? No, you need a permission for that also.

All these things are just in your custody, but they are not your property, because somebody else rules over them. That somebody else is the real owner.

You just have a privilege to hold these things with you for everyday use, with the caveat that you do bear the consequence of using all of these things, but you do not reap the fruit of actually owning it. That fruit is actually the power to decide about it. You do not have that power. Somebody else does.

If you do anything outside the permissible rules of the real owner, you will be punished. It is as simple as that. Do anything outside the permissible rules involving the house you live in, the car you drive, the money you spend etc. and you will face a punishment, a loss, a debt. Your house, car and money can be taken away from you. Even your children if you have any. You will face the wrath of the real owner and you have nothing to say in the matter. Why?

Because you do not own it. And as you do not own it, you have no say in it.

Nobody can have a say in somebody else's property. That is an indisputable fact. Because somebody else owns everything you have in your custody, you have no say in it. You can't just go ahead and change anything substantial on your house, car or in your paperwork. You need a permission for that. You need a license. In other words, you need to beg somebody to be allowed to do that. The one you are begging to is the real owner.

And even worse, you do not own your person either. The person is the fictional being we call the birth certificate, passport or any other ID document or signed contract. That fictional being that you have been pretending to be all your life, is not your property. It belongs to the owner. That is because the owner is the one who made that fiction of law. The owner made the person, the illusion, the deception, the fraud, so the maker of it owns it.

But if it is fictional, how can it belong to anyone? It is fake isn't it? It is not real, right? If it is fictional, how can there be an owner?

Because the owner of that person is not real either. It is a fiction, just like the person.

The owner of everything in the legal system is another illusion, concocted in the minds of people. It is another created fiction that rules all fictions. And this owner has been created by living beings to rule over them. It has been created in their minds to enable them to live in deception.

Who is this owner then? The state. The government. The authority that has been created by living beings - as an illusion - to rule over them, by their own decree. The state or government is also a legal fiction. It only exists on paper and in the minds of people. It is not real. It is a fiction. And it owns everything within its jurisdiction.

The state or government has created persons to rule over. And because almost all living beings act as if they are a person, the legal fiction which is called the government, rules the living beings through their pretense of being the person. This process manifests through their behavior and indoctrination.

And who are the real owners? The ones who have full control over the state or government. The ones that can steer any decision through the authority of government. It is that simple.

There is only one owner in any legal system of any jurisdiction and that owner owns everything. And that one owner is the one who makes the rules.

It is a scam so enormous that nobody is seeing that they are being deceived every time they think that they own something.

The owner is not real, but yet in the minds of people the owner is made real through acting through the person. That is why the person and the owner are intrinsically connected: there can be no owner without the person and no person without the owner. They are reciprocal. The owner owns all the persons that it has created. If you act thus on behalf of your person, you are owned. And because the fictitious owner created the person, it owns the person.

Whoever created it, owns it, has jurisdiction over it, rules over it and thus fully controls it. The owner of the legal system has thus full control over the person.

And every time you act as if you are the person, the owner will have full jurisdiction over you as a living being, because you pretend to be your ID.

Because you pretend to be somebody that you are not and because you in fact lie about who you really are, you - through the person - are owned by the owner of the legal system.

I can imagine that it is a hard swallow, but it is the truth. Researching all of this and how the legal system works was also for me a hard pill to swallow. But it is the red pill. If you stop and reflect on all of this and see for yourself in society how things work, it will begin to dawn on you. You have been deceived. I have been deceived. Many people have been deceived. But it does not have to be like this.

We can change this around. Quite easily, I might add.

For me, there is no anger, but just a feeling of awe as I stand there and observe the cold and cruel precision of the deception. I also lived the lie in complete oblivion, minding my own business and thinking none of it. Until something external poked me to have a look. At that moment I started using my thinking, intuition and observation.

Then the de-programming of my indoctrination started and I am very happy to have pushed further into it to unravel the truth. In reality it is about stepping out of your indoctrination. It is about de-programming yourself, by feeding yourself with truthful things and stop poisoning yourself with lies and deceit.

Another hard pill for me to swallow was that I realized that the cause of all this deception in my life was my ignorance. I just let all of this happen. I am not the victim here, but the cause.

People are owned, because they deceive others as well, by playing the role that they are that person on the passport or on the drivers license. They are putting up a mask to conceal their real identity by using a false identity, a con, a falsehood, namely the person. And through their acting, they give life to a dead being. This is the hidden art of law. It's being involved in necromancy without even realizing it. Most people are oblivious to dark forces and hidden mechanics that play out every day, everywhere and with almost everybody. It is out in the open, but very few people who care, seem to really see this.

Every time you use the person, you are subject to the owner and thus you do not own anything.

You do not own anything because there is already an owner and you are not it. You have basically no say in your life, you are forced in obeying somebody else's rules, you have to ask permission for everything you want to do and the most tragical fact of this whole matter is that somebody else is ruling over your property. You actually do own something if you stop pretending to be the person.

The major deception is the lie that you are told that you own the things you own.

You hear it everywhere around you. 'My' house, 'my' car, 'my' money, 'my' clothes, 'my' food etc. The deception is that almost everybody in society truly believes that they own something. They have been told that all their lives and they believe it.

Yet the mental dissonance occurs when people say that they own something, 'my' this and that, but at the same time they pay taxes on the things in their custody, they beg for permission on the things in their custody and they just accept that things in their custody are taken away for whatever reason.

They do not realize that you cannot own and not own something at the same time. Yet, they have equated those two things in their head. They have been deceived and they do not know that they are being deceived. They can't see it.

Owning something and not owning something are two entirely separate things. They are two different worlds all together. They are two completely different dynamics. They cannot be mixed. They cannot be equated. This is the error that must be corrected.

In people's minds they have equated two things that are not the same. They have made an error, but they do not know they have made that error. They do not know that they have been deceived. Also because the deception is a blatant lie.

How then can they correct that error? As they do not know they made an error, they have no motivation to go about and correcting it, so it will not happen. Only an external impetus can wake them up by telling them that they do not own anything.

So how to correct it? Simply by realizing that owning something and not owning something are not equal. You either own it or not. And if you have no say in things that are in your custody, you will soon realize they are not yours.

This has massive consequences on so many levels. You will quickly realize that everything you have done in your life was for somebody else. You will realize you have been obeying somebody else's rules. Somebody else had a say in what was supposed to be yours. You will comprehend that you have been swindled out of what was rightfully yours.

You would probably dismiss what I say, because you worked for it, right? Because you inherited it, right? Because you were bearing the consequences for it, right? Because you paid your taxes on it, right? Because you went to jail for it, right? Because you died for it, right?

No, it was not rightfully yours. Never has been. But you believed it. And that is how the deception got a hold of you and how it persuaded you to live somebody else's rules and obey them.

You see how massively intrusive and unpleasant it becomes when you realize that somebody else was making the rules in the life, liberty and property that was supposed to be yours.

The tragic nature of this all is that this is how you have been and are being deceived. It is the second pillar of deception and without it, the legal system could never work. The first pillar is the person, the legal fiction. But, everything starts with the owner and everything ends with the owner. Even the person is subject to the owner. That is because the person is a creation by the owner. They go hand in hand.

And this owner is not even real.

But who is the owner? The owner is the one who makes the rules. The owner is the one that has jurisdiction.

Take any jurisdiction existing today, like a country, a state, a province, a town, a kingdom, anything. Whomever makes the rules there is the owner. In a state or country it is the government, in a secondary state it is a governor's administration, in a province it is the administrative county, in a town it is the mayor, in a kingdom it is the king and so on.

Whoever makes the rules, owns it. And you would be right to notice that all of these aspects are legal fictions or true fictions. They are not real. Even a king or queen is not real, as he or she is a figurehead, playing out a role and claiming divine rule, by the grace of God. But even that claim is not vested in truth, because no king had ever, or will ever have, proof to show that God gave him the right to rule by His grace. It is all a scam.

The king lives as a symbol in the heads of people. He is just a man, like everyone else, who acts out a role and has nothing special compared to anyone else. He was just the lucky one to land the main part, the main role, the main character in the play of 'society' on the stage of the claimed territory that his people call 'their kingdom'.

Everybody is playing out the part that they have chosen to play. In reality, a kingdom or any jurisdiction is not real, but to mankind it is real, because they have made it real in their mind, in their imagination, and it shows in their behavior. And because it shows in their behavior, their illusion causes destruction, pain and suffering. Reality suffers and people hallucinate. It is both the goof and the tragedy of mankind.

But how can something that is not real, make the rules or do anything? That is quite simple. It is the collective mind of the brainwashed masses of living beings that conjure the owner out of nothing to rule over them. They do this by acting out themselves to force this deception on themselves. It is played out in the minds of the people in everything they do.

Their minds have been hijacked to believe a lie and they act it out as if the lie were real.

They cannot see it, because they live in a deception. They are so ingrained in it, that they cannot see it or they cannot see a way out of it.

They are ruled over, but the ruler is invisible, yet everybody obeys this invisible ruler, this illusion, the state, the government. And ultimately they obey the individuals who control the state or government. This is a small minority of beings who ruthlessly dictate the rules to the masses with an iron fist.

It is an utter clever and cunning deception that works like clockwork. Until you see it. Then it loses all power and hallucination over you.

The tragedy is that people wholly create an illusion to live in, while they already have a reality that is there for them to live in.

People have chosen the illusion over reality. The lie over truth. Deception over honesty. And this is all because they have no property. This is because they have given their rightful property away, when they chose to put on the mask, a long long time ago.

They gave it all away when they started to act on behalf of the person, the dead entity, the mask they wear.

They started to act as if they were dead and lost it all.
